OCLC Number: (OCoLC)50094860 Subject: High speed ground transportation -- Law and legislation -- United States. Excerpt: . . . stration within the United States Department of Transportation (DOT) with an estimated 70, 000 new Federal employees at a cost of 6. 8 billion in FY 2002 alone, including 50, 000 airport security personnel. The Federal government has also provided significant subsidies to support public transit, including local bus, commuter rail, light rail, and trolley bus transportation. Since 1970, the Federal Transit Administration (FTA) has received 106 billion in Federal funding. Transit ridership has risen dramatically in recent years, rising to 9. 5 billion commuter trips in calendar year 2001. A recent report by the United States General Accounting Office (GAO) stated that Although the level of New Starts funding is higher than it has ever been, the demand for these resources is also extremely high. TEA-21 identified over 190 projects nationwide as eligible to compete for New Starts funding. (Report GAO-02- 0603) In effect, Federal transportation policies have promoted the development of highways, aviation, and transit systems, while significantly less attention has been paid to the development of our rail passenger system. Since 1971, the Federal government has spent over 400 billion of taxpayer funds on the highway system, over 170 billion on our aviation system, 106 billion on transit, yet, in spite of its critical importance to our nations transportation, only 25 billion on rail passenger service. Notably, however, congestion, security, and environmental quality issues and the current imbalance in our national transportation system have given rise to a reevaluation of Federal transportation spending policies. Congestion-related economic losses continue to cause loss of productivity. The costs of highway congestion include delay, increased travel time, increased...
